The more the subject is considered, the more strongly, we imagine, the conviction will deepen that in so important a matter it would he impossible to place reliance in any pledge the Chinese Government might be induced to give with regard to the preservation of the purity of a silver coinage issued by it: This is to be regretted, for it would be more -satisfactory to see-China-in-possession of a national coinage than dependent upon foreign countries for it. So long, however, as the present dynasty holds the destinies of the Empire in its bands, it is to be feared that no. change for the better in the system of government will take place. And while the chief husiness of Chinese officials is to somecze money in every conceivable way from the people and from trade, it is impossible to feel confidence in the administration. But though the scheme for the establishment of a Mint by the Chinese Government cannot, brutality of the master or of his officers. for the reasons above_stated, commond itself to foreigners, yet there is no reason why a Mint should not be established in Chiua under foreign auspices. Mr. Netson's auggestion, that a British dollar should be coined at home which might be current alike in the Straits Settlements and China, is a good one. Mr. GRANVILLE SHARP's proposal that the British Government should revive the Mint in Hongkoug and coin for the South, while the United States Government could supply the North of China, is similar, but more comprehensive. No Powers could so well undertake the work, and none could so fully command the confidence of the Chinese people a position to establish a Mint for herself, it been tried, and was pronounced a failure; why, then, seek to renew the attempt? But these objections are easily answered. Great Britain has vast commercial, interests in China, and it would greatly facilitate business if the cumbrous sycee and chopped dollars could be replaced by a new und clean coinage. Moreover, if, as Mr. SHARP suggested, the Empire were to be Upon Captain Pranon's own admissions, flooded from one end to the other with coins however, it cannot be doubted that he was bearing the image and superscription of Vic-TORIA, the benighted people could not fail to become aware in time of the mighty influence and exceeding power of the nation they re. crew altogether, the fact stands out that this presented, and thus by degrees correct the man died in accordation and with surroundings false notions which their Government has the most wretched. Mr. Lister. Postmaster-General, summoned Mr. Raphael Lopez, master of the Spanish steamship Zamboanaa, for nulawfully and wilfully delaying the delivery to the Post Office of this colony of the mails brought by the steamer. Zamboanga was reported to him as coming into nort, and according to custom he sent his boat to the steamer that afternoon to get the mails and circulate them before dark. The boatman took off a printed notice as follows :- " Please hand to bearer, without delay, all mails and loose letters on board your ship (except those for your agent or consignees) for delivery to the General Post Office. N. B .- You are requested to bear in mind, in arriving hore on future occasions, that the Hongkong Post Office does not undertake to send for mails, though the Post Office boat will call for them if it be passing. Should they not be sent for at once, therefore, you are bound to land them at the Post Office without delay. The penalty-for not doing so is five hundred dollars. (See Harbour Regulations)." ENGLISH POLICY IN THE EAS An exposition of the present-negot of the Eastern Question is given in the Neologos, the leading Greek journal of Constantinople of

" For a long time back the Slav impulse has been secretly fostered, and under the very eyes of the Ostoman Government, at times by pamand St. Peterburg. It several times alternately arose from the scow, followed by the report of broke out and was quelled; when finally, last year, the north-western Turkish provinces, all surrounded by the Slav populations of Austrin, and Montenegro, were chosen for the centre of its action. And a very good choice it was both in a military and political view. On one side the revolt could be perpetuated by outward help; on the other, by being abandoned to Panslavism. Austrian policy could become a means. of action. Owing to the position of the revolted provinces, Europe would be frightened at the prospect of a European war, and the other Slav opalations of Turkey thus be left at liberty to ake up arms and leisurely prepare to enter the lists. The secret diplomacy of the "North," the national diplomacy, had ably played its grace; now was the time for official diplomacy to come

Its work had long been traced out; it lay in the inauguration of the intervention principle 1 Turkey, a principle abeliahed by the Treats of Paris, and the protraction of the struggle, all concessions to the revolted provinces made pontaneously by Turkey, without the intervention of diplomacy, were declared null and void; the rebels were led to believe themselves a Power in presence of a Power, the more se as. albeit diplomacy put a pressure on Turkey to accept its propositions, it let the rebels free to eject or to after them. The Andrasas Memorandum, so estentationally announced. was rejected by the rebels, despite the assurance offits acceptance given by the official and semiofficial press of the three Empires. Mr Basilewsky was suddenly chosen by them as their representative, and the three Cabinets. beard their propositions through him. All this deliberation ended in the Berlin Memorandum; in other words, in a vehement intervention in Turkish affairs. The revolt was prolonged; the rebels were set up into relligerants; and, lastly, a vague threat of material intervention, menacing to impair European peace, loomed ominiously in the distance. Servia and Montenegro in the meanwhile prepared for the struggle, and the unfortunate Bulgarians thrust themselves doop intothe revolt in order to lure the serpent out of its nest. Efforts were made to stir up other populations, and the expiration of the two months' armistice fixed by the Berlin Memorandum was to have been the commencement of a general rising in the East. But do not let us deceive ourselves. The Berlin Memorandum was no more applicable to the Porte than it was acceptable to the insurgents. It would, by fanning the national and religious amour proprs of the Turks, bave driven them to despair and madness, and the Christians, consequently, to a general rising. The fover of national amour propre began to show itself among the Turks towards the last days of Abdul Asiz's reign, when the news of the drawing up of the Berlin Memorandim reached them. Massacre and devastation showed that the time so ardently longed for by the Panslavio policy had come at last; all was ripe, and had it not open for England's refusal to join in the Berlin Note, for Sir Henry Elliot's energetic action, and for Abdul Aziz's deposition in the name of progress and reform, this longed for bour indeed bad struck. Panslavic policy, there, cannot forgive England the wreck of all its hopes. Hence the origin of its grievanors, so ably unfolded in order to work up public opinion in England. The atroctics in Bulgaria have supplied it a spleudid opportunity, and it made the best of it. The impudence of the Panalavicorgans is really unparalleled. The unfortunate but imprudent Bulgarians were driven by them into a destructive struggle; they were excited by them to havoo and massacre; and the only possible excuse for the savage and barbarous acts of the Circussions and Bashi Bazouks was again furnished by them, for they brought about these borrible reprisals. And while no official remonstrance was made by the northern Powers to the Porte the Panslavio organs accuse Sir Henry Elliot, who, in spits of all that has been said in Parliament, has never, since last May ceased from transmitting to his Government al. the information that could be gathered on the anbject, although be naturally was slow in coming in from different quarters in these times should be warily and cautiously accepted as reliable and anthentio. Extracts. BY BAYARD TAYLOR. I am horn from the womb of the cloud. And the strength of the ordent son. When the winds have consid to be loud, And the rivers of rain to run. Then light on my sevenfold arch. I swing in the effence of air. While the vapour's beneath no merch. For a moment I haver and pleam On the shirts of the sinking storm, And I die in the bliss of the beam That gave me being and form. I fasle, se in human bearte The rapture that mocks the will: pais as a dream departs That cannot itself fulfill! Beyond the bridger I have spanned The fields of the poet unfold. And the riches of miryland At my bases of misty gold! I keep the wealth of the spheres. Which the high gods never have won; And Lagin from their airy tears. For some have stolen the grace That is hidden in rest or strife, And some have copied the face Or celeged the voice of Life: And some have woven of sound A chain of the sweetest control And some have fabled or found .The key to the human soul; But I from the blank of the air Aud the white of the barren beam Have wrought the colors that flare In the forms of a painter's dream, And the sparks of the gams to me; Till pale are the blossoming bowers, And dim the chameleon sea! By the soul's bright sun, the eye,

GAELIC BARDS. It has been often said that the race of bards has become extinct. This is just as true as that the Gaelic spirit has departed, or that Gaelic has ceased to be spoken. There are as many Guelic bards at the present day as there were in the days of MacMhaighstir Alastair and Duncan Ban True it is that the grand old Gaul, William Livingstone, is dead, as well as the Rev Duncan Maclean, the sacred bard of Glenorchay. But we have bards still left us. There is Farquhar Macdonell in Australia; Evan Maccoll in Canada; and there are several successful votaries of the muse in ancient Albin. We have Dugald Macphail weaving his awest songs in southern cities; and John Cameron holding poetic intercourse with the ghosts of his fathers on the confines of Argvil and Inverness. Besides these, Rahoy and Morvern have been rendered vocal anew by the poetic patriarchs who have resided there and the seas and the bave and the glens al over have echoed back the deeply human cries of the bardess Mary Mackellar. And there is another yet, whom we venture to designate Bard Laurente of the Gaels-Nigel MacNeill, who, however, we are afraid intwithstanding this designation, may nove receive a butt of wine nor a hundred marks. -" Gaelic Poetry," in the London Scottish Journal. INNOCENT GIRLS There is something so charming in innoconce that we are apt to overlook its incon veniences and its dangers. To be innocent is to require perpetual protection and attendance, and to be constantly exposed to the nutchinations of ill-disposed people. It is a question how far men really do admire innocence. The man who ventures to flirt with an innocent girl does so, as he is aware, at great personal risk. He never knows where ture. He cannot beln constantly fancying that she holds up a mask to disguise her real features, and expecting the mask to be withdrawn; and he is carried away; in spite of himself, from step to step until he cannot retreat. In fact, he cannot believe in the reality of her innocence till it has been reto our nation and time.
